Crisis Management in Public Relations

Introduction

Crisis management by Xcelerate Training Institutes is the process of handling unexpected, disruptive events .Its importance grew after major industrial and environmental disasters. Crises are sudden threats requiring swift action. Unlike risk management, which predicts and prevents risks, crisis management focuses on immediate response. It involves identifying, assessing, and addressing critical situations. Effective crisis management requires clear systems, roles, and processes. It also includes understanding public perception, measuring crisis impact, and effective communication. Reputation, while intangible, boosts business value. Reputation management involves shaping public perception through various strategies, including social media monitoring and public relations campaigns. Understanding stakeholder views is crucial. Issues management identifies potential problems affecting the organization. These three areas are vital for organizational success. This course provides in-depth knowledge of crisis management in public relations, helping you manage crises, protect your organization's reputation, and advance your career.
