PPP Regulation Training Course

Introduction

Introduction

Public-Private Partnerships (PPPs) are an arrangement between partners from both sectors, private and public. It thus becomes extremely necessary to regulate and monitor PPPs from the start. PPPs could be for short-term or long-term and may or may not involve the element of funding; however, in most cases, such partnerships are long-term and involve funding by the private sector partner.

PPP regulation and monitoring is critical to enable seamless administration from the start. That is, regulation and monitoring help check whether all scenarios and situations have been outlined clearly in the contract, whether all clauses in the contract are being adhered to, whether the responsibilities outlined for each partner are being carried out in accordance with the contract, etc.

Contract managers are appointed to check that the clauses set out in the contract are respected through the partnership and the activities are in line with achieving the end objective of the PPP. Monitoring PPP contracts also ensure that the relationship between both partners is kept under check to avoid severance, which could, in turn, affect the activities of the project and, ultimately, the objective.

Regulation and monitoring of Public-Private Partnerships start from preparatory work of ensuring that the necessary frameworks are in place, through the project by ensuring project activities are on track, to the end result, i.e. the objective outlined in the contract. Monitoring helps keep a check on the performance of the project and predicts risks earlier in the process so that these can be addressed in time, without affecting the outcome quality or timeline drastically.

Overall, PPP regulation and monitoring helps set standards for service delivery, regulate services charges, establish market rules, monitor the performance of entities and mediate and settle disputes.

This Xcelerate Training Institute course will empower you with in-depth understanding, knowledge and information of PPP regulation and monitoring. It will provide you with the experience, exposure and confidence needed to partake in PPP regulation and monitoring, thus enhancing your skill set to take up additional roles and responsibilities and grow within your organization.
